MEMORANDUM FOR: Deputy Director for Intelligence
FROM: Director of Central Intelligence
SUBJECT: Your Remarks to National Strategic Materials and Minerals Program Advisory Committee

I like your remarks to the National Strategic Materials and Minerals Program Advisory Committee. I think the portion on the risk of becoming vulnerable is particularly valuable and should be looked at in greater depth in a broad document and also in the document about opportunities abroad for US know-how and technology to be applied to demonstrate our ability to deliver economic benefits in contrast to the Soviets' ability to deliver only know-how and military equipment, as well as to improve our own markets to help Third World countries to service their heavy debt. I understand from Herb that this latter subject has been intended as a future estimate and I would like to see how that is being formulated again sometime early in June.

MEMORANDUM FOR: Deputy Director of Intelligence
SUBJECT: Estimates

I visited with the Senior Review Panel the other day. They had what I think is a very good suggestion, namely, that it be part of the estimate system to build in maps and graphics from the outset rather than treat them as an add-on. The visual presentation would be intrinsic to the estimate from the outset. It would help to do this if we required that the graphics be specified in the first draft of the estimate so that other people could contribute to the presentation. Also, I get a copy of the Senior Review Panel's comments on the estimate and the NIO gets a copy. You might have the NIO send me a copy of his reaction to the Senior Review Panel comments.
